Jus' Ramblin'
BY
LUCILE K. WOODHAM MCRAE

RICHARD NIXON SAYS the way he keeps his weight down is "eat cottage cheese until it runs out of my ears. I put catnip on it. If you put catnip on it, it doesn't taste like cottage cheese at all."

Nixon was answering questions on a campaign television broadcast and was asked how he keeps his weight down.

I have tried everything else so now I'll try eating cottage cheese with catnip on it. However, I like the taste of cottage cheese but putting catnip on it would be a change if you "eat" cottage cheese until it runs out of your ears.

WE HAD TO STOP talking about going hungry and such stuff around the children. Two of them quit eating because they thought the rest of the family was in danger of starving to death but that "pleasantly plump Sonya" took quite a different view. She ate everything she could get her hands on for "tomorrow we might not eat," she thought.

SEVERAL MONTHS ago I read an article by someone who apparently didn't know any more about the subject than I did about backyard cooking and cancer. What made me notice it so much was the fact that I had just bought a large cooking unit for the backyard to charcoal steaks, etc. Well, I figured I had bought myself trouble instead and was more than concerned about the report that outdoor cooking could be a cause of cancer.

This week Dr. Joseph G. Molner took his entire column to explain something about it which I was very glad to know about. He had received a number of inquiries asking if charcoal cooking is known to cause cancer. He said there are so many backyard cooks, and this cancer story has been repeated so many times, that a great many people are worried, according to letters he had received from readers. He said that the trouble is that the writers of such articles evidently haven't read the original scientific reports, or anyway haven't read the original scientific reports, or anyway haven't read them carefully. It seems that the presence of carcinogens in charcoal-broiled meat had been reported by investigators. Dr. Molner stated that a carcinogen is any substance that tends to produce cancer, and that the principal carcinogen in this case is a substance known as benzopyrene, a chemical that does produce cancer when it is inhaled or consumed in some form.

Dr. Molner said that in cooking, it comes from fat dripping into the fire. Then the smoke from the charcoal upward to the meat. He said the presence is undisputed but that the quantity seldom seems to be mentioned in the scare stories. He called attention to the fact that the original researchers reported it, but people didn't read it, or they stopped before they reached the end of the article. He stated that the amount of benzopyrene which gets on a kilogram (2.2 pounds) of steak in this way is 5.6 micrograms, or about one millionth of a gram. A gram is 1/1000 of an ounce, he said, hence, to consume an ounce of this chemical, one would have to eat pretty close to 30 million steaks.

Dr. Molner said he does not intend to give up charcoal broiling. But he did say that he does not cook on such a large, hot fire that dripping fat turns it into a bonfire. He said that manufacturers of cooking equipment advocate small fires and keeping the meat at a fair distance from it, that a few coals, really, are enough. He reminded readers that investigators, in summing up their conclusions, wrote in so many words that "the presence of benzopyrene does not indicate a human hazard." But the people who made the scare story of the report didn't get down to that information. He mentioned the fact that air-pollution contains many carcinogens, smoking has some, and that charcoal-broiling had received over-generous attention.

So I am again proud of my charcoal broiler and can cook steaks without worrying about an over abundance of carcinogens. And the cost of steaks will keep us from eating 30 million of them during our lifetime. According to the number of steaks I can afford to buy for charcoal-broiling, I will never have to worry about getting very many carcinogens.

Allen Lets Talk In Senate Go On
By BOB INGRAM
Advertiser Staff Writer
The succession amendment was on its death bed in the Senate Thursday night. The prognosis was it would not live another 24 hours.

The plan, which had precipitated a monumental political struggle in Alabama, sank into a deep coma early in the day when two vitally needed senators representing two vitally needed votes were reported missing.

The condition worsened Thursday night when Lt. Gov. Jim Allen, bringing to a crushing end all manner of speculation about the powerful gavel he wields, made it clear he had no intention of bringing the filibuster to an end.

Allen gave the Senate five conclusions he had reached on the situation in the upper chamber, and putting them all together they spelled death for Gov. George Wallace's ambitions to run for a second term.

1. It is going to be impossible to amend the Senate rules to reduce to 18 the number of votes needed to invoke cloture.

Voters, Do Not Be Fooled... Know These Facts About the Senate Race! IF GOV. GEORGE WALLACE'S SUCCESSION BILL HAD PASSED IN 1965, HE WOULD BE GOVERNOR TODAY!

Allen's conclusions were:
1. It is going to be impossible to amend the Senate rules to reduce to 18 the number of votes needed to invoke cloture.
2. As presiding officer he will not not cannot be overruled on the question of allowing extended debate on a rules change.

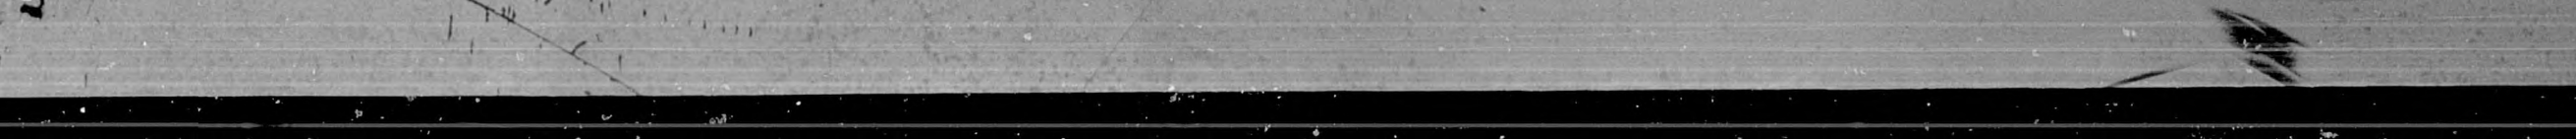

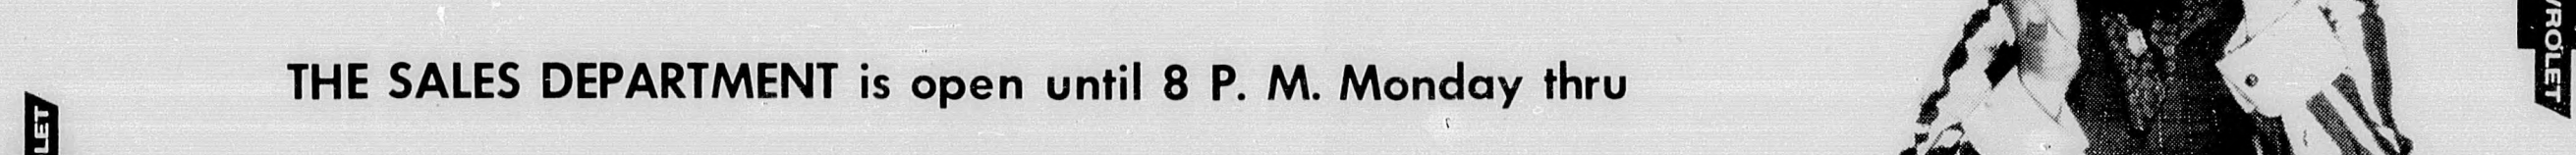

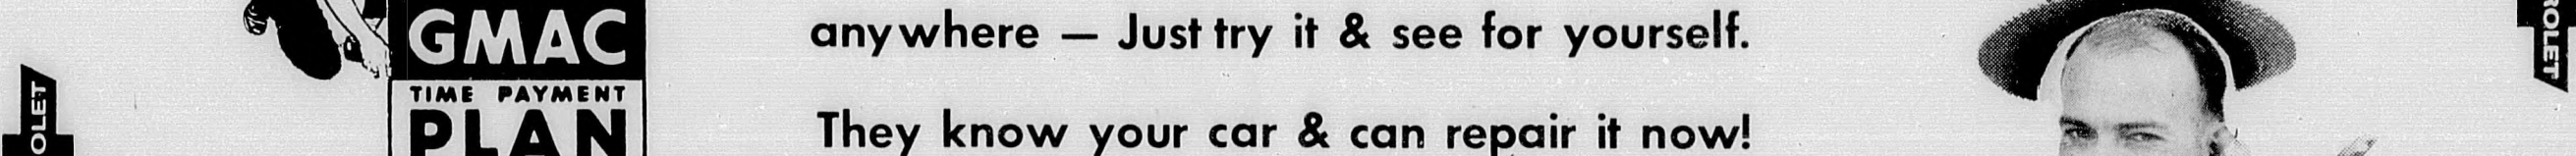

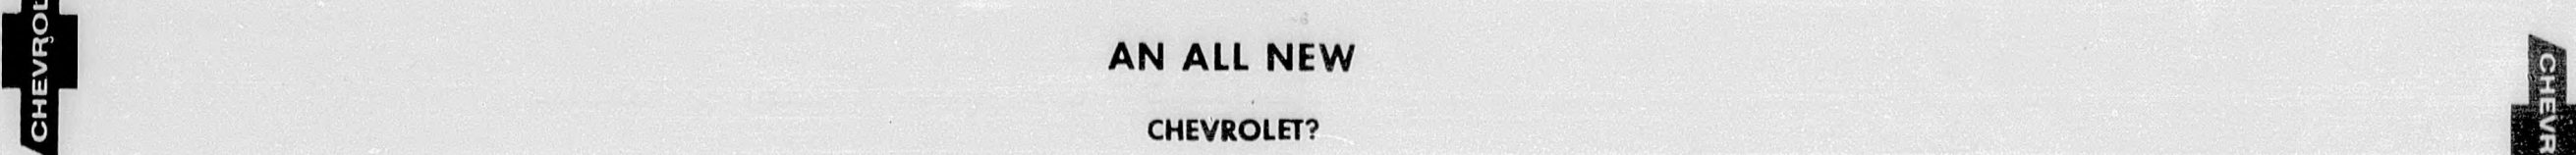

Jim Allen and seven senators blocked the succession bill. None of the seven remain in politics today—either their own people beat them at the polls or they chose not to run. This is the first time Jim Allen has run for public office since that vote.
